

Table of Contents

Preface	— 7
On the armed revolt of the Polish katorzhniks on the Baikal Route 150 years ago (Wiktoria Śliwowska)	— 9
“On the eighth day, the weather was good”— introduction	— 11

I. THE UPRISING OF 1866

“On the Baikal Route”— katorga labour and the insurgents’ conspiracy	— 18
“The government called it a revolt”— the first clashes and the takeover of the territory	— 35
“Guns were at work”— fighting by the Bistraya and Mishikha Rivers	— 48
“Wading in the taiga”— a flight towards China	— 67
“What can the accused say in his defence?”— inquiry, trial, and conviction	— 76
“The morning of 27 November was exceptionally freezing and humid”— the four before a firing squad	— 88
“We have received news on the death of good sons of Poland”— reactions of compatriots	— 91
“They managed to slaughter sixty sheep”— material damage along the insurgents’ path	— 96
“Until absolutely loyal”— the tangled fortunes of the rebels	— 104

“The last category”—
the executed, fallen, dead from wounds, or missing — 114

II. TRACES OF THE PAST AND MEMORY OF THE EVENTS

- “Diary excerpts”—
the uprising in the eyes of the participants
and witnesses — 120
- “Farewell, my beloved country”—
goodbye letters from the executed — 129
- “In this splinter of Rzeczpospolita”— poems — 139
- “On the insurgents’ path”—
along Lake Baikal and over the Khamar-Daban Mountains — 143
- “Katorzhnik’s gold”—
a 1866 tale of an insurgent’s treasure — 148

What should we say about the 1866 uprising?—
in lieu of an ending — 155

Bibliography — 159
Index of names — 165